Asian Turtle Conservation Network

May 5, 2004

People working with turtles in Asia can solicit online advice and assistance through the new Vet-Asia list, established to serve the regional as part of the Asian Turtle Conservation Network.

The Vet-Asia list includes expert veterinarians with experience and knowledge in turtle medicine available to provide on-line consultation to questions relating to the proper treatment and health care of turtles in captivity.

If you have a question relevant to health care and treatment of turtles that you would like to receive advice on, just submit your question to Vet-Asia and one of the list's qualified veterinarians will get back to you with an answer.

Vet Asia list subscribers are also encouraged to share their experiences and ideas with the rest of the list subscribers relating to turtle health issues, especially regarding problems that you face with your turtles, methods of treatments, medications that have yielded successful results, etc. Your experiences may help others!

Contact the network on atcn@thiennhien.org for more information on how to join!
